

Love Is in the Heir (The Featherton Sisters Book 4)

I am sure the ladies Letitia and Viola Featherton are wrong when it comes to matchmaking. They insist that it has all to do with love. I, Miss Hannah Chillton, believe one has only to bring a couple together and let nature take its true course. To prove my point, I secretly plan to match the ladies themselves. What a challenge! Why, they are practically in their dotage. And love certainly does not signify in the match the Featherton sisters are making for me. True, when Lord St. Albans and I first met, he took my breath away. But after we accidentally ran him down with our carriage, by accident of course, I became convinced he belongs to that most despicable class of men--rakes. His arrogance is insufferable except when he appears so shy and considerate that I almost think St. Albans is two different men. But that cannot be possible. Or can it?
